NORTHAMPTON, Mass., November 1, 2001 - Healthcommunities.com, Inc., announced the first video, "Dog Bites," in its What You Should Know public health and safety video series. The video, featured on AnimalHealthChannel.com, focuses on dog bite prevention. "We're using the Internet to promote public health and safety as a service to our physician clients and the health care information consumers who visit our Web channels," said Dr. Stanley J. Swierzewski III, founder and CEO of Healthcommunities.com.

The "Dog Bites" video features animal behaviorist Kelly Bollen, who explains that even nonaggressive dogs will bite, if provoked. The most frequent victims of dog bites are children. Bollen talks about the importance of selecting and training the right dog for a family, behaviors that parents can teach their children to keep them safe and what to do when a dog attacks.
